The oil on canvas WPA mural in the lobby by Clarence Holbrook Carter (recently restored) shows an almost surrealistic view of Ravenna's Public Square in the Civil War era. The 1830 Court House and stone jail were demolished in 1960, but the Etna House on the far right still stands today.

The oil on canvas WPA mural in the lobby by Clarence Holbrook Carter (recently restored) shows an almost surrealistic view of Ravenna's Public Square in the Civil War era. The 1830 Court House and stone jail were demolished in 1960, but the Etna House on the far right still stands today.

Ravenna post office an architectural lion

By JACK SCHAFFER

Editor's note: This is a story about Ravenna's post office building.

It's often the case that we take things for granted. When we consider the Ravenna Post Office building, it is one that is certainly familiar to us. It is so familiar that we sometimes take its presence for granted.

The Ravenna Post Office building is a classic example of a post office building that was designed and built in the early 1930s. It is located on South Chestnut Street and is one of the few remaining post office buildings in the country.

The building was designed by the Supervising Architect of the Great Depression, James A. Wetmore, and was constructed by the Works Progress Administration (WPA). It is a fine example of the New Deal era architecture and is a testament to the artistic and architectural talent of the time.

The building is a large, two-story structure with a prominent cupola and a tall, narrow clock tower. The front façade is adorned with ornate decorative elements, such as relief sculptures and floral motifs.

The interior of the building features a large, open reception area with a counter and several mailboxes. The walls are decorated with murals created by local artists, depicting scenes of the region's history and culture.

The Ravenna Post Office building is not only a functional post office, but also a fine example of the historical architecture of the time. It is a testament to the dedication of those who worked on its construction and is a valuable reminder of the architectural achievements of the past.

The building has been preserved and maintained over the years, ensuring that it continues to serve the community as a functional post office. Its preservation is a testament to the importance of preserving our architectural heritage and is a reminder of the lasting value of such structures.

The Ravenna Post Office building is a true architectural gem and a true testament to the skill and dedication of those who worked on its construction. It is a valuable part of the community and a symbol of the rich history and culture of the region.